Archaeology (Studies in English), full-time, second cycle, limit: 10

New challenges faced by archaeology in the 21st century as well as students' expectations of professional tuition geared towards practical knowledge applicable to future work are main ideas behind the proposed programme of the second-cycle studies in archaeology with instruction in English.

The programme is dedicated for candidates from all around the world who want to research ancient cultures, in particular from the Mediterranean, and to learn about bioarchaeology.

An important role in the study programme is played by student field practices: surveys and excavations. Detailed information on the study programme can be found at www.archeologia.uw.edu.pl/en/programme-of-ma-studies/

The results of the oral exam in English will be taken into account in the recruitment procedure, mainly based on the books from the list, which will be published in the IRK system and on the website of the Faculty of Archaeology of the University of Warsaw.

The questions will mainly concern general archaeological issues, including history, methodology of archaeology, methods of archaeological research and the specificity of the specialization in which the candidate wants to develop at the second-cycle studies.

Candidates will be assessed on a scale of 0 to 30 points.

The condition for admission to second-cycle full-time studies, within the limit of places, will be obtaining a minimum of 17 points from the oral exam and submission of a complete set of required documents, including a university diploma, within the prescribed period.
